1.d4 f5 2.g4 Simon Williams: '?!' Simon
 Williams: 'This move has been played a little too early as Black can now use his f-pawn to create some problems.' 2...fxg4 3.h3 g3 Simon Williams: 'If Black was forced to capture on h3 then White would have plenty of compensation in the form of an open h-file and pressure against Black's king.

As we have said before, one clever remark made about the Dutch Defence went as follows: "Black would be fine in the Dutch if he could play the move f5-f7 in the early middlegame!" I am not sure that things are that bad for Black, but he does need to be careful about the safety of his king.

The move 3...g3 forces White to make some concessions around his kingside and it also keeps the h-file closed.

[3...d5]
4.fxg3 Nf6 Simon Williams: 'Black cannot be worse in this position. The pawn structure is fairly symmetrical and White has created some weaknesses on his kingside by playing 4 fxg3.

3.Bg5!? Nf6 4.Nc3!? Nxg4 5.Bg2 c6 6.Nf3C

I had sacrificed the pawn in order to obtain this great lead in development; however, it seems that my pieces are now misplaced. The c3 knight and g2 bishop are seriously cramped by the solid d5 and c6 pawns. It appears that they'll be no attack to-day...until Black starts heading in the wrong direction... 6...Qc7?! Oddly, 1 hour and 50 minutes had passed to reach this unbalanced position, after just 6 moves. Due to partly my opponent's 10 minute delay in arriving and, of course, the effectiveness of 2.g4's shocking nature!

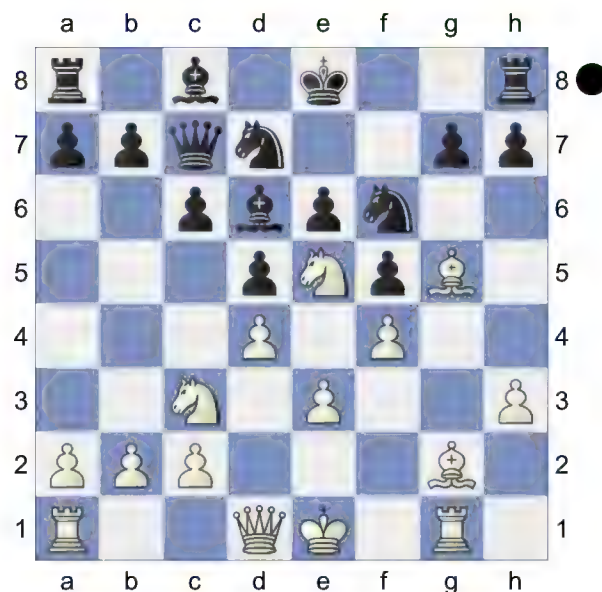

[6...Nd7 7.h3 Ngf6 8.Qd2 h6 9.Bxf6 Nxf6≡ is an example of how White can find nothing to weaken, and nowhere to enter the fortress-strong Black camp.]

7.e3 e6 8.h3 Nf6 9.Ne5 Nbd7 10.Rg1 Bd6?! Further decreasing his advantage. This bishop serves little purpose in the end.
